Mateship with Birds is a clever title for this book. While 'bird' can mean both the winged variety and in slang, a sexually attractive woman, 'mateship' draws on dual meanings too: mating - finding a mate, courtship rituals and mating for life; and also the Australian notion of mateship - meaning a special kind of friendship: laconic, but loyal: an indivisible, enduring bond between equals.

August, 2013. Carrie Tiffany's inaugural Stella Prize-winning novel, Mateship with Birds, is set in the 1950s around Cohuna, a town in northern Victoria, and named after a 1922 book of bird notes by Australian writer Alec Chisholm. Both in this novel and in her first, award-winning book Everyman's Rules for Scientific Living, Tiffany re-creates historical periods through invoking the everyday publications - the guides, manuals, newspapers and magazines - of the age.
