I came to know of the Isolation Door because the author did an AMA on reddit. It is a story about pain. Of the pain arising from living with a loved one's mental illness, the awareness that you are broken and the constant, almost pathological struggle to emerge from it, never knowing when you'll slip further or give in for good.

Isolation Door Reader Question: What's Real & What's ...

At the beginning of the novel, Ma and Jack are confined to Room. Donoghue explores the effects of their isolation from the world, charting how their seclusion is shaping both of their lives. Ma and Jack live a simple, regimented life inside Room. Every object is important and, in Jack's view, sentient.
